Reports on Salvador Aid Misleading, Critics Say

By John M. Goshko Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Three con-

sional critics of President Ronald Reagan's Central America policies alleged Tuesday that most of the $1.7 billion in U.S. aid to El Salvador during the past five years has been used to pursue a military solution to the Salvadoran civil war rather than for "economic and social development," as the administration claims

The administration has used "insufficient, misleading and in some cases false information" to disguise the fact that only 15 percent of U.S. aid has been used for "reform and development," the three legislators said. The critics assert that the rest has been direct military aid or war-related aid applied to "a step-bystep escalation of a strategy for a military victory."

A State Department spokesman denied the allegations.

The charges are contained in a report by Senator Mark O. Hat-field, Republican of Oregon; Representative Jim Leach, Republican of Iowa, and Representative George Miller, a California Democrat, to the congressional Arms Control and Foreign Policy Cau-cus, a 130-member bipartisan

It was distributed to members of prepared by the three lawmakers and their aides and does not seek to reflect the views of the member ship, the report says. Mr. Hatfield is chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, which must approve foreign aid requests, Mr. and Mr. Miller is chairman of its El Salvador task force.

The report challenges adminis tration assertions that it consistently has allocated aid to Salvadoran economic and social development rather than to military activities "by a 3-to-1 margin." The report says that analysis shows this claim to be "flawed because it describes aid simply by which U.S. agency administers it - rather than what the aid is actually used for."

The report describes "indirect, war-related aid" as including cash transfers to sustain the Salvadoran government and economy in the face of war-induced economic coldiscipline, of authority, of discour-aging others. She wants to see all leakers keel-hanled." According to the report, the ways in which aid have been applied show a "low priority" for reform. "Our original attempt to expand and upgrade the Salvadoran Army has broadened, resulting in a counterinsurgency strategy, remi-niscent of Vietnam, which has heightened the casualties among the civilian population," it says.

The report also cites as examples of the administration giving false or misleading information to Con-congressional committees of plans to build an air base in eastern El Salvador until after Congress had voted on Salvadoran aid requests.

Besides the local pro-Israeli agents who have been assassinated, there have many smaller incidents in which people have had their shops or cars blown up as warnings to either stop dealing with Israeli forces or to get out of town.

"We are now taking measures to defend the lives of those people who have been associated with israel," said an Israeli defense offi-cial. He declined to elaborate.

The assassinations have apparently damaged Israel's intelligencegathering in southern Lebanon, which some Israeli analysts say was not very good to begin with. Israeli experts who have worked in the area say that once-friendly Leba-nese sources now tell them not to contact them. Ten days ago, lists handwritten in Arabic were pasted on walls in Tyre with the names of 60 alleged "collaborators," most of whom were understood to have already fled Lebanon.

Another reason for the recent increase in attacks on the Israeli forces, defense analysts said, was because the Israelis are using the roads more with slow-moving vehicles, hauling heavy equipment and men southward in preparation for the first stage of the Israeli troop withdrawal. As a result, they have become easier targets.

This situation has made Israeli troops extremely cautious. They have recently adopted the practice of firing in the air as they drive their convoys through potentially hostile villages, according to inde-pendent security sources in south-

Goldwater Proposes Cuts in Defense WASHINGTON (AP) — Senator Barry Goldwater, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has proposed trimming President' Ronald Reagan's defense buildup by $33 billion over the next three years, as part of an overall Republican plan to reduce federal deficits, congressional sources said Tuesday.

Officials said that Mr. Goldwater proposed allowing defense spending. authority to rise by 4 percent a year for each of the next three years after allowing for inflation, in contrast to the president's proposed increases of 5.9 percent in 1986, 8.2 percent in 1987 and 8.8 percent in 1988.

Mr. Goldwater, a Republican of Arizona, made his recommendation privately to the Senate majority leader, Robert J. Dole of Kansas. He, stressed that it was contingent on a proposal of a series of cuts in domestic programs to round out the deficit-cutting plan, said the sources.

Kenneth L. Adelman, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, said such a ban should have top priority because "the.

dangers of chemical weapons proliferation are increasing." Mr. Adelman urged the Soviet Union to "engage in serious negotiations on every element" of the U.S. draft for a ban on chemical weapons, proposed in April by Vice President George Bush. The conference, the world's only multilateral disarmament forum, has been deadlocked for more than a decade on the question of a ban on chemical weapons because of disputes on verification and enforcement.

According to several experts, the care of women in pregnancy, childbirth, and the period immediately afterward has become too risky financially and too draining emotionally for hundreds of specialists across the country, particularly in such states as New York, Florida, and California where malpractice suits are most frequent and jury awards are most generous. "A lot of obsterricians are leaving the speciality and concentrating instead on gynecology," said William Reilly of New Jersey Medical Underwriters. "Opting out of delivering babies is one way to protect yourself against the malpractice epidemic." Obstetricians, along with neurosurgeons and orthopedists, are prime targets for lawsuits. Americans are filing nearly three times as many medical malpractice claims as they filed a decade ago, according to a recent report by the American Medical Association, and they are winning record sestlements, especially when the

Although medical experts cite no effect as yet on the availability of care for pregnant women and their babies, they fear the eventual impact if doctors continne to turn away from obstetrics. Those who tend to abandon the field, they say, are usually older and among the most experienced, leaving the same number of patients to be cared for by fewer, less experienced doctors or by midwives.

"I'll tell you why I quit after 10 years of delivering babies," said Dr. David A. Ronk, of Norman, Oklahoma. "It just got to be too much hassle for the return. It's not just the disruption of your life 24 hours a day. It's a whole atmosphere of confrontation now between doctors and patients. We believe someone must always be at fault. Medical experts acknowledge that some doctors make mistakes that they should be held accountable Lawyers who represent malpractice claimants say the rise in claims results from sloppy and negligent medical practices, combined with the public's increased awareness of the right to sue. And jury awards of millions of dollars, they say, are a recognition of the lifetime financial impact of severe health problems.

But few dispute that the American malpractice situation, in obstetrics and in medicine as a whole, is in some cases corroding the doctor-patient relationship and is pushing up the nation's health care bill.

American doctors pay more than $2 billion for insurance against malpractice suits, a cost passed along to patients in the form of higher fees.

Two decades of medical advances have also conditioned parents to expect that any problem can be solved with the right machine, technique or doctor. The rate of women's deaths in childbirth, for instance has fallen to less than seven per 100,000 births today from 83 per 100,000 in 1951. In the same time, infant

"When you deliver a baby today," said Dr. Theodore Loring, whose practice delivering babies has spanned precisely that period, "parents expect it to come out perfectly. Speed in financial transactions is traditionally of great importance. Today however, many banks are realizing the equal importance of personal service, and are using Philips state-of-the-art PTS 6000 banking systems to free staff for more direct customer contact.

The Royal Bank of Canada have some 3,000 Philips workstations for this purpose. One front-office station can reduce the operations per transaction from six to just one. Other Canadian banks have installed a large number of Philips Automated Teller Machines, both as through-the-wall models and lobby machines. Philips has supplied more than 100,000 workstations to banks world-wide.

Our PTS 6000 system is recognized as one of the world's leading systems, and is used by international banks in Austria, Hong Kong. the Netherlands, Sweden, the UK, Switzerland, Belgium, etc.

Philips is proud to be extensively involved in Singapore's prestigious Raffles City project, which includes the world's tallest hotel, the 73-storey Westin Stamford, opening in 1986.

We speed up banking transactions in Canada, and prevent high energy costs in Singapore.

The project (which covers 3 hectares and includes another hotel, the 28-storey twin-core Westin Plaza, a 42-storey office tower, and a 7-storey podium housing the country's largest convention centre and shopping centre) confirms Singapore's continued importance as a Far East business centre.

The entire complex will be illuminated by Philips using more than 42,000 energy-saving PL* and "TL'D luminaires. Special "low-brightness" luminaires will be used in the offices.

Philips will also supply a specially designed system for transmitting TV programmes, in-house movies, and information channels through a single coaxial cable to all rooms and the office building; an independent public address system provides background music to the shopping centre and function rooms.

Time for a Middle Way

much on stopping inflation and not enough on social problems? Industrialized countries have certainly pursued a rigorous course to slow down price increases. Poorer ones have done the same to control their foreign debt. For want of a better way, most governments have relied mainly on putting people out of work. The social cost has been great.

Francis Blanchard, director-general of the International Labor Organization, argues (IHT, Feb. 6) that policies have been lopsided, giving excessive weight to the narrowly economic side of problems and forgetting the human dimension. To redress the balance, he wants ministers responsible for both sides -- the economic and the social -to meet down under the aegis of the ILO and try to work out a middle way.

Certainly, you have to look at the two dimensions simultaneously. Action in neither can work alone. Unless you damp down inflation you will not get the justice and progress for which society cries out, because, as millions of Latin Americans can testify, nothing is so socially unjust as hyperinflation. But without sufficient attention to justice, economic policy will not restore order and stability — or not for long — because continuous unfair distribution of sacrifice brings the population into the streets and.

too often, the military into government. So we can go a long way in supporting the Blanchard thesis that policies designed by finance ministers cannot be divorced from the aims of the ministries concerned with labor and social affairs — and, indeed, with education and the environment. Just to take

Has the world been concentrating too one example, better training and retraining facilities are needed in this era of rapid technological change if workers are to escape the slag heap and governments are to escape social explosion.

Whether some new international meeting will get us far is uncertain. The argument is that, inside each country, economic and social policies are developed in isolation from each other, because of the specialization of administrative functions. This is reflected at world level by too narrow a distribution of responsibilities between international institutions. The IMF and GATT concentrate on high finance and trade, the ILO on social problems, and never the twain shall meet.

That is not entirely true. The OECD, for example, prides itself on bridging the various concerns that the national machinery of government keeps apart, and so does the European Community. They confront the adversarial ministers, who end by conceding that the economic and the social must go hand-in-hand, just as they would profess that sin is bad and motherhood is good. Back home, however, little changes.

To be more than mere preaching social policy must cost money. At present, heads of government listen more to finance ministers. who want to save it, than to their social colleagues, who want to spend it. But this is not to say there is no room for advance along the social road, and both Mr. Reagan and Mrs. Thatcher have hinted at it. Social spending can be redesigned to great advantage, with less for the middle classes and more for those most in need.

Taiwan Strains a Bond

Taiwan calls itself Free China and asks Americans to believe that it is not a police state. That asks a lot. Despite limited freedoms and a flourishing free market, Taiwan is a republic only in name. One family, one party and one cause permeate its politics. Its aging leaders cling to views hardened since their flight from the mainland in 1949 and have ruled with martial law ever since.

All this is now under American scrutiny because Taiwan is implicated in a blatant act of terrorism — the gunning down in a San Francisco suburb last October of Henry Liu, a Chinese-American who wrote a muckraking book about the Chiang dynasty. The murder is said to have been the work of a Taiwanese criminal syndicate called the Bamboo Union. Taiwan holds two suspects and has fired three intelligence officials. It vigorously denies any high-level involvement.

In doing that much, Taiwan shames another "friendly" dictatorship, in Chile, which has yet to answer for its part in the Washington murder of Orlando Letelier in 1976, In both cases, solid FBI work established the foreign link, but the effect has been more devastating in Taiwan. Its economy and armed forces are more directly tied to the United States. Congress had Taiwan in mind when it voted to bar arm sales to countries found guilty of harassing people in America. What prompted that amendment was the unexplained "sui-cide" of a Chinese-American scholar, Chen Wen-cheng, after questioning in 1981 by the Taipei police. There is enough smoke to justify a current House study of Taiwanese harassing and spying among Chinese-Americans.

Nor is it hostile to wonder when Taiwan will outgrow its closed political system. Native Taiwanese, who are 85 percent of the island's 18.5 million inhabitants, can vote only for 'supplementary" seats in the national legislature, whose majority consists of lifetime members elected on the mainland in 1947.

The repression tightened last summer, when Beijing promised Hong Kong a capitalist autonomy and offered a similar deal to Taiwan. The mainlanders' Olympic feats were stonily ignored by Taiwan, which closed down the American edition of The China Times after it fully reported the games. Somehow in this panic over losing hearts and minds, someone picked up the signal that Henry Liu had to die. Taiwan can begin to cleanse this stain by releasing suspects for trial in the United States. It could begin to atone for the crime by prac-

Drifting Toward Trouble

Do big budget deficits make any difference? The Congressional Budget Office provides a clear and balanced answer in its annual assessment of the outlook for the next five years.

President Reagan, in his State of the Union message, once again said. "The best way to reduce deficits is through economic growth." The CBO, also once again, warns that growth will not do it. It calculates that, even with rather optimistic economic assumptions, present policy will push deficits from $214 billion this year to $296 billion by 1990.

Americans do not seem inclined to do much about it. Mr. Reagan will not hear of tax increases or significant cuts in defense. Without cuts in defense. Congress will not do much cutting anywhere else. In the voting public at large, people agree, with a yawn, that deficits are terrible, and also that things seem to be doing pretty well in spite of them - and turn the conversation to more rewarding subjects.

Even very large deficits, the CBO says, are unlikely to generate a sudden economic crisis. It could be a long time before even very large deficits start to result in stagnating standards of living, or in reduced defense capabilities. But although it happens slowly, it will happen. And as the damage accumulates the process will be increasingly difficult to reverse.

High deficits can lead to low capital forma-tion, since the government is soaking up mon-ey that would otherwise go into productive investment. Lower investment means lower productivity and, in turn, lower economic growth. Perhaps the present stream of foreign capital will keep pouring into America. It does not seem likely to continue at the present rate, year after year. If it should dry up, interest rates would jump and threaten what the CBO terms an explosion of federal debt - a vicious circle in which high interest rates begin compounding a rapidly rising debt. Along with all of these possibilities there is the reality that. whether the rise in debt is fast or slow, the pressures for inflation will rise with it.

In the politics of the federal deficit, the optimists are the people who hope for a financial crisis — sharp but manageable — this year. Without some sort of crisis, they argue, there will never be a sufficiently strong sense of urgency in the government or in the country to force an end to the present drift. But the CBO is delivering the somber message that there is no reason necessarily to expect a crisis. The real cost may be, instead, a steady erosion of American prosperity and economic power that does not become apparent until the 1990s.

1910: Modern Liners Are Not Secure PARIS — The wreck of the General Chanzy on the coast of Minorca [on Feb. 10] excites the sympathy of the world. It is not only the list of the more than 150 dead which makes the impression, it is the contrast offered by a great steamship, fighting her way, apparently unconquerable, through a storm-ridden ocean, and the same vessel on a lee shore being reduced to matchwood by the very sea it seemed to defy. Kipling's lines: "Saw a liner's lights go past / Like a damned hotel" sum up the feeling felt by those on less privileged ships, who see the modern palace steamship in mid-ocean. The apparent security of the modern liner gives the full measure of the possible catastrophe. The great vessel driving full speed on a rock-bound coast, her passengers sleeping calmly in their cabins, calls up a scene of horror before the dullest imagination.

1935: Italy Readies Troops for Africa PARIS - On the heels of an Italian official communiqué announcing another clash between Italians and Abyssinian tribesmen on the border of Abyssinia there were reports that two Italian divisions and the mechanized sections of three conscript classes - almost 35,000 men in all - were getting ready to embark for Italian Somaliland. The Abyssinian Legation in Rome issued a statement that it had no knowledge of the incident, and made the countercharge that Italian troops were on Abvssinian territory. The mobilization was described in Italian dispatches as a "precautionary measure." This explanation will hardly satisfy that growing mass of world opinion which looks to the League for the pacific settlement of international disputes. Both Italy and Abyssinia are members of the League, and the quarrel is over a strip of territory.

principal concern is for the protection of our citizens, but we are not unaware of the possibility that Israel may use the pretext of "absence of law and order" to intervene again.

Israeli occupation has not ensured law and order. Many acts of resistance have taken place during the Israeli occupation, after all. Any threat to local populations can best be reduced by the extension of goverument authority to the south. No major attacks of this sort have taken place where the government has exercised effective control.

Since its invasion in 1982, Israel has weakened both the government and the army by trying to arrive at special arrangements with individual groups. Ultimately, only the central government of Lebanon can provide what is required in the south. This is not Sinai or the Golan Heights; it is a heavily populated area needing the social, economic and administrative services only a strong government can provide. Neither the Israeli army nor certainly the small (2,000-member) illegal local militia it supports has been able to protect Israel's interests or those of the local citizens. The idea of a 25-mile (40kilometer) security belt never made military sense. If there is no strong government on our side of the border. there will also be no limit to the weapons that might be used against Israel, and some of those could have ranges of 50 to 100 miles or more.

Israel has found that stable and responsible, albeit unfriendly, relations such as exist on its borders with Egypt, Jordan and even Syria are ast likely when the territory across the border is governed by a strong central government. Thus it is as much in Israel's interest as in Lebanon's to have a strong rather than a weak Lebanese central government.

The Danger In Hyping The Deficit

By Isabel V. Sawhill

WASHINGTON — Almost daily we hear that deficits are a calamity for America. While they are a serious matter, we should not over-state their adverse consequences for the economy. If the dire consequences that some predict fail to materialize, public complacency about the real dangers could easily follow:

Contrary to the popular opinion. disaster is not imminent. True, a sud-den withdrawal of foreign capital or the failure of a major bank or corporation could trigger a credit crisis that would put the American economy in. a tailspin. But the probabilities of this occurring are rather small.

Moreover, deficits do not cause recession. They mean that the government is putting more money into cit-zens' hands than it is taking away in taxes; and as they spend, the result is more production and more jobs. While the resulting high interest rates curtail some types of spending, this rarely if ever offsets the original stimulus from deficit spending.

Deficits need not be inflationary. As long as the Federal Reserve does not permit the money supply to grow too quickly, inflation can be avoided. Of course, if the Fed overreacts to the threat of inflation it may cause a recession. But this is a tightrope that the monetary authorities have to walk in every recovery period.

If deficits are not necessarily going to cause a financial crisis, a recess or inflation, why all the fuss? The damage is mostly long-term and comes in three forms. • First, high interest rates will curb investment spending and lead over a number of years to less capital formation and to slower economic growth. A reasonable estimate, given all the uncertainties, is that continuing deficits in the neighborhood of $200 billion a year will reduce the annual growth rate by 0.2 percentage points over the next decade. Thus, if the growth rate of inflation-adjusted GNP is projected to be 3.5 percent in the absence of the deficits, it would be 3.3 percent with them.

Most of the adverse effects would not show up until later in this decade and into the next. And most people would hardly notice the difference. especially since they would have no basis for comparing actual experi-ence to what might have happened under an alternative fiscal policy.

• A second problem associated with deficits is the soaring cost of servicing the national debt. Since the debt expands by about $200 billion a year, the cost of financing it rises by about $20 billion a year (at an interest rate of 10 percent), a cost that then threatens to push the next year's deficit still higher. Without strong economic growth, reduced spending or higher taxes, deficits automatically grow larger by the amount of each year's additional interest outlays in self-propelling spiral.

Third, deficits push up the value that the rest of Israel's forces can of the dollar and reshuffle the growth of jobs and output away from industries that compete in international markets and toward services and other trade-protected sectors. These We are deeply worried about the short-run effects have been widely noted, but the real concern should be with the likelihood of a long-term competitive disadvantage for American businesses. Once lost, strategic opportunities to enter new markets or to expand market share are hard to regain, and improvements in the American standard of living could be steadily undermined by an erosion of its ability to trade with other nations on favorable terms.

These three problems - less capi tal formation, exploding interest costs and a possible loss of strategic advantage in world markets - are both real and serious. But none has any very immediate or visible impact on the average citizen and none will necessarily prevent the economy from performing adequately or well over the remainder of this decade.

Hyping the deficit problem in the interest of spurring leaders to act is understandable, but crying wolf is, as always, a risky strategy. Should a political stalemate occur but the economy sail through the next few years in good health, then the supplysiders who now argue that deficits are unimportant will appear to be vindi-cated and will gain new converts among the public. At that point, who will be left to protect our children from the real wolf at their door?

Mr. Lange, who has described himself as a middle-of-the-road socialist, said that New Zealand still considered itself a firm ally of the Americans, referring to them in the vernacular as "mates."

But he noted that New Zealand was highly dependent on foreign trade and that the United States was a vital market for its products.

"We are therefore absolutely vulnerable in the event that we are cut off from that economic lifeblood," Mr. Lange said. "And if we are, well, then we don't relate so well with our mates."

The refusal to allow the port call was viewed in the United States as undermining the 34-year-old AN-ZUS alliance, which includes Australia. New Zealand and the United

In the face of these moves, Mr. Lange said:

This government is committed to an alliance with the United States. We have no intention of withdrawing from it. There need be no comfort given to the Soviet Union in thinking we have withdrawn. Later, the United States apparently softened its position. An official said that the White House was not planning any sanctions, but he said it would no longer argue on New Zealand's behalf for trade benefits in Congress.

The Reagan administration has told Soviet officials that Afghanistan is among the topics that Richard W. Murphy, the assistant secre-tary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian Affairs, intends to bring up in discussions on the Middie East. Those talks are to take place later this month in Vienna.

Last month, U.S. officials listed Afghanistan as a likely topic, along with the Arab-Israeli conflict, Lebanon, the Iran-Iraq war, and Soviet military support for Syria and Libya. The Russians have not yet agreed to the full agenda, officials said Monday.

Vietnamese forces firing thousands of artillery and mortar shells launched a two-pronged attack on Khmer Rouge positions in western Cambodia on Tuesday, forcing about 20,000 Cambodian villagers into Thai territory, Thai military sources told The Associated Press in Aranyanrathet. Anthony Hopkins Shines In a Schnitzler Revival

By Michael Billington International Herald Tribune

ONDON - The Old Vic, bought by Canadian millionaire Ed Mirvish TONDON—The Old Vic, bought by Canadian millionaire Ed Mirvist. In 1983, soldiers on mysteriously alternating the good and the bad. Last month they gave us a dreary adaptation of Dickens's "Great Expectations." Now they redeem themselves with a first-rate revival of Arthur Schmitzler's buried 1904 masterpiece, "The Lonely Road," which brings Anthony Hopkins back to the London stage after a 10-year absence in Hollywood. Schmitzler's play is a haunting piece of work: one that describes, with autobiographical intensity, the high price paid for a life devoted to sexual pleasure and personal freedom.

Schnitzler, best known as the author of "La Ronde," once described himself as "a virtuoso of solitude," and this play is about lonely people. The key figure, Inlian Fichmer, is a globe-trotting painter driven back to Vienna by the overpowering desire to see his 23-year-old son, Felix, whom he has sired with his best friend's wife. But Felix, unaware of his whom he has stred with his best friend's wife. But Felix, unaware of his real father's identity, has been brought up in a busy, bourgeois household dedicated to self-fulfillment. The irony is that Felix wants the same freedom his father once enjoyed, and so, rejecting Julian's paternal longings, he joins a dying writer named von Sala on an obviously doomed expedition to explore a buried Afghan city.

Echoes of Chekhov and Ibsen abound. What makes Schnitzler different is his ability to create a Viennese bourgeois world in which everyone is in the grip of illusion. Julian lives on the illusion that paternity implies possession. The equally solitary von Sala believes that exploration of some Asian city will give meaning to his barren life. Felix's tragically trustrated sister dreams endlessly of cities filled with symbolic towers and ends up drowning herself in you Sala's pond. Frend's "The Interpretation of Dreams" was published in Vienna in 1900. Schnitzler, himself a doctor, shows Freudian ideas at work in the everyday world. This is what makes it a great play. It shows that selfhood leads to nnhappiness. But it also shows bourgeois-respectable people destroyed by their fantasies. Christopher Fettes takes this literally by setting the action inside a psychiatric hospital and by treating the characters as case histories relentlessly observed by a frock-coated Viennese doctor. At first, the device seems merely irritating. But it pays increasingly rich dividends since it allows us to view the characters critically rather than identify with them emotionally. It also leads to one superb visual coup when we see Felix's suicidal sister trapped inside these institutional walls during a thunderstorm like a fly buzzing around under a bell jar.

But perhaps the greatest pleasure lies in watching Hopkins back on the stage. He plays the painter like a man aching for human commitment: in one unforgettable scene he stands downstage, eyes slowly moistening, as his son gazes at a portrait of his mother and begins to understand his origins. Hopkins, playing with mature quietness, has the naked-souled quality of the real actor. Colin Firth lends his son a brusque determination, Samantha Eggar plays the painter's ex-mistress with the jeweled glamor of one of Gustav Klimt's painted Art-Nouveau women, and Alan Dobie as the solitary writer turns himself into an animated death's head. The production is open to debate; I have no doubts, however, about saying that the Old Vic has wiped the dust off a theatrical landmark.

Death and solitude also figure strongly in Nigel Williams's wryly entertaining new play, "My Brother's Keeper," at the Greenwich theater. Williams made his name with "Class Enemy" and similar studies of the angry, dispossessed working-class. This new play is his first about the middle classes whence he derives. It is, in fact, a skeletons in-the closet Tamily drama (with strong echoes of Eugene O'Neill) set around the hospital bedside of a dying 74-year-old actor and showing his two sons locked in bitter conflict as the old man tries to die peacefully.

Williams's point is that only at moments of terminal crisis do the middle classes come clean and speak the direct truth. But his play draws most of its considerable energy from Tony, the dying man's radical-playwright son, who is one of those self-loathing jokers familiar in modern British drama from Jimmy Porter onwards. What is good is that Williams relishes Tony's wit while demolishing his claim to have a ary form his passerby clients remonopoly of virtue and wisdom. John McEnery plays him superbly as a bilious, scrawny figure ransing on about his love for his father without allowing him to die with dignity. Williams writes about the working classes like a reporter, here he writes about the middle classes like a rueful

Protests at Embassy Put Him at Eye of Storm

ASHINGTON - From his secondfloor office at the embassy, the South African ambassador. Bernardus G. Fourie, looks past the open curtains to Massachusetts Avenue. Through the bare branches of a tree, beyond an occasional pedestrian bundled up against the cold, he has a perfect view of the statue of Winston Churchill outside the British Embassy across the street.

Mr. Fourie has no view at all of the antiapartheid demonstrators who are starting to assemble at the corner. A District of Columbia law requiring 500 feet (about 152 meters) between demonstrators, and the embassy spares

For all his seeming indifference, Mr. Fourie's life has changed dramatically since Nov. 21 When Herman Toivo ja Toivo, secretary-gener-when three leaders of the Free South Africa al of South-West Africa Peoples Organization. Movement refused to leave his office, an action that signaled the start of the demonstrations.

It has made him, simultaneously, a pariah in journalist, the eyes of the demonstrators, a defender of the sanctity of diplomatic missions in the eyes of his peers and a new media personality. Where he once averaged one or two interviews a week, the embassy says he now averages that many each

And while the arrests have triggered a wave of negative public relations against the South African government that even its organizers had not anticipated, they also have opened a forum for Mr. Fourie to state South Africa's side.

"I'm a little fellow, quiet by nature, who loves puttering in the garden and talking to my house plants," Mr. Fourie said. But he has not missed the opportunity to put forth his country's case in

He said it is not difficult to represent a country whose policies are under attack. "The tragedy," he said, "is that the type of policy that's called 'South African policy'—and I say it very often — is a caricature of the real policy."

To Mr. Fourie, "It's like putting up a dummy and shooting it down and then thinking, well,

Although the signs are subtle, Mr. Fourie's had previously debated South Africa's policies social and business relationships with his Embassy Row peer group are unavoidably influenced by South Africa's apartheid policy.

"It is an extremely unpopular policy," said a West European diplomat. "If you have a nice party, you don't think of the South African ambassador — any more than you think of the Bulgarian, the Czechoslovakian or the Chilean ambassadors -as bringing a lot of fun to it. For one thing, it might turn your party into a polem-Imperturbable on the subject, Mr. Fourie said he has never felt ostracized in Washington, either before or after the demonstrations, nor has he ever been aware at any time that his presence has been an embarrassment, either to a host or to colleagues.

"Oh, there might be people who resent us, but so many are friendly. There are so many pressure groups." he said. "I don't want to bring the word 'racial' into it because I'll be accused the next day of saying this country is racialistic, and I'm not saying that."

A courtly man known to like American football and cookouts, Mr. Fourie is also a devoted family man who prizes his private life with his wife, Daphne, whom he married when he was a member of the South African delegation to the United Nations in 1962. Their two children, Gerhard and Nicolette, are university students in South Africa.

"I've got one philosophy," he said. "When you go home at night, then you're at home with your family. You can't be in your office 24 hours a day. If you are, you won't last."

Highly respected at home, where he was regarded as the man who kept South Africa's Foreign Service together, he was known as the "consummate" diplomat, the negotiator's negotiator and "Mr. Namibia."

Another aspect I fell puzzled about is there are many countries in Africa where human rights are nonexistent, and they're silent about that." ONDON — The European view of the United States suffers chronically from double vision. The perception of the American present is clear and vivid, if seldom free from distortion. In striking contrast, the image of the American past — if it registers at all in the minds of most Europeans - is blurred

On the one hand, the senses (not to mention the sensibilities) of Europeans are constantly assailed by the sights and sounds and tastes of a whole range of contemporary American phe-nomena — from cruise missiles, high interest rates and apparently nonstop electioneering to Michael Jackson, Billy Graham, J.R. Ewing. McDonald's hamburgers and Coca-Cola. The impact of American power, American products and American popular culture is an everyday fact of life for West Europeans.

On the other hand, for the great majority of those same Europeans, awareness of the American past is minimal. There is some vague recollection of dramatic events, such as the American Revolution or the Civil War, although the tendency to confuse or conflate the two events lingers. There is a more vivid picture of the American frontier, built up by prolonged exposure to Western films, but that picture is abstract and almost timeless, and largely unhistor-

Not surprisingly, history syllabuses in British schools and universities — and no doubt in Continental European countries, too — remain essentially Europe-centered. But American history does now appear, at least as an option, in most university history syllabuses and is fea-tured more and more in history teaching in the secondary schools. Particularly in Britain, American history also is prominent in multidis-ciplinary American studies programs that flourish in a number of universities.

Even among those who should know better. however, various arguments still are articulated -or, more likely than not, implied - to justify League of Nations, Mr. Fourie said his love of or explain away European ignorance of the the United States goes back to 1945, when he American past. For those wise enough to have abandoned the notion of a father-son relationship between Europe and America, or the illusion that Western Europe could play the role of the civilizing Greek in the American Roman empire, there remains a more subtle defense of European unconcern with the American past. The world has changed so much in the last half-century, so the argument runs, that it has made all earlier American history irrelevant.

The formative influences and distinguishing marks of the first century and a half of the history of the United States - the frontier, mass immigration from Europe, relative political isolation and cost-free security, absorption in internal development - have vanished from the late 20th-century world of superpower politics, the proliferation of nuclear weapons, dwindling natural resources, dependence on imported oil and the intractable problems of mass urban

They must appreciate, for example, why the two most recent U.S. presidents, on their way to the leadership of the most complex technological and urbanized society in the world, should choose to project themselves as, in Jimmy Carter's case, the farm boy cherishing his native soil. And, in Ronald Reagan's case, the cowboy symbolizing the simpler values of a bygone age.

One basic theme of American history is the constant wrestling with the dilemma between a hankering for the past and loyalty to the ideals with which a small agrarian republic of four million souls began in the 18th century, and, on the other hand, an exuberant belief in progress, and a reaching out for the material rewards of American abundance.

European historians of America must explain to their public that the characteristic American view looks backward as well as forward, and that the American tradition mixes devotion to old ideals and pursuit of the fruits of abundance in a particularly heady brew. Much European distortion or misconception of the American scene may be explained by a tendency to look at only one half of this compound - to observe "Naturally," the friend said, "they won't through one eye when binocular vision is re-

Very properly, one of the early concerns of British historians of the United States was to introduce the subject to a British student audience. Harry Allen, William Brock, and, perhaps most successfully. Frank Thistlethwaite, in his remarkably durable book "The Great Experi-ment," were among those who published broad surveys or interpretative essays with this purpose in mind. The tradition lives on and has recently been raised to a new level in Maldwyn Jones's "The Limits of Liberty," a textbook of American history by a British historian. At a time when textbook writing in the United States has increasingly become a team activity for syndicates of six or eight historians, Mr. Jones's single-handed effort is a prodigious achieve-

What emerges from all this work is a variety

The days are passing when reviews of such work in American historical journals combined the inevitable reference to the nationality of the author with at least a touch of condescension in the criticism. It is a healthy sign of the times that the American Historical Association has helped to sponsor, and the National Endowment for the Humanities to finance, the preparation of a "Guide to the Study of United States History Outside the United States, 1945-1980." This major reference work, edited by Lewis Hanke, is due for publication this year.

BUT there is a larger issue involved in the European contribution to American history, and a larger role that European historians might seek to perform. The task might be described somewhat grandiosely as saving American history from itself. Modern American historiography has shown a tendency to violent fluctuations, not altercations, between two extremes. The mainstream tradition of American historical writing, dating back to George Bancroft if not earlier, has been essentially triumphalists tradition always has faced challenges, but never has it been so buffeted as in the last 20 years: During this period, an alternative version of equalities, barbarities, cruelty and exploitation. This violent contrast, or confrontation, be-1 tween two versions of the American past wrapping one's history in the Stars and Stripes can historiography.

To proclaim, as the main lesson of American history, that if the United States is not the best country in the world it must certainly be the worst is a peculiarly perverted and self-indul-gent argument for American exceptionalism, [0]. Marcus Cunliffe, the most authentic and most the uniqueness of the American experience. European historians may help to mitigate the worst excesses of this kind of adversarial history, with its all-or-nothing oversimplifications. They could and should be in a position to contribute 2. more balanced view, a sense of proportion and of context that is often more easily achieved by the outside observer.

Non-American historians always have been very suspicious of the case for the uniqueness of the American historical experience, chiefly because the claim to be unique, or at least excep-tional, often has seemed to carry with it ag assumption of moral superiority. At the same time, it has to be said that British historians and their students often have been fascinated, above all, by events such as the Civil War, or phenomena such as slavery or westward expansion, which have no direct parallel in modern European history. They are attracted by what is exceptional in the American past, but wary of theories of exceptionalism. Paradoxically, the case for American exceptionalism has to be recognized as an exercise in comparative history. What is distinctive or ex-ceptional can be identified only through comparison or contrast with the history of other societies, even if that comparison often is implied rather than stated. European historians surely have an opportunity to make the comparative study of American history more explicit and more rewarding. There is little to be gained from comparison either between things that have little or nothing in common, or between things that are almost identical.

The historical experiences of Western Europe and the United States over the last 200 years have enough in common to provide a basis of comparison, but also an abundance of differences and divergences - in political development, class structure, ethnic mixture and coonomic growth - that make comparison fruitful

In the last quarter of the 20th century, as non-Western nations like Japan and China have gained greater prominence, and as U.S. power, productivity and affluence no longer outsine that of the rest of the world so dazzlingly, the United States and Europe once again may be impressed by what they share. It takes a certain kind of Gallic confidence to assert, in the words of one French historian, that "L'histoire Americaine s'européanise.'

But this may be the time to stake a claim that the European study of American history has come of age. The American contribution to the study of the European past has been rich beyond measure; now we live in an era of two-way trans-Atlantic traffic in historical scholarship.

Peter J. Parish is the director of the Institute of the United States at the University of London. He wrote this article for The New York Times.

Heinz's O'Reilly Gets Thrills in Outside Roles

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1985

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

EW YORK — Many executives dream of leaving the corporate fold to lead the adventurous life of an entrepreneur. Few ever dream that they could have both — the security and leverage afforded by a high-paying corporate job as well as the thrills and big money (your very own) associated with being a successful entrepreneur.

Anthony J. F. O'Reilly, 48, president and chief executive of H. J. Heinz Co., has it all. Besides being chief executive of the $3.74-billion U. S. food company and chairman of two Irish companies he started, he is also part owner of an Irish newspaper chain, Independent Newspapers Ltd.

By the time he was 30, Mr. O'Reilly had already gone through at least two incarnations -"I started with the first as an Irish rugby star, the second as one of the youngest chief executives, at 26, of the Irish Dairy Board, a gov-ernment agency. He then be-came head of Irish Sugar Co. The turning point in his career came in 1969, when he decided to take the top job at Heinz's British subsidiary instead of becoming Irish minister of $32,000; I didn't have a silver spoon in my hand."

"I could have easily gone with Irish politics, a British company or a straightforward entrepreneurial role," he said. "I didn't consciously say to myself, it's CEO or bust." After heading the British subsidiary of Heinz and working as senior vice president for North America and the Pacific, Mr. O'Reilly became president of Heinz in 1973 and chief executive in 1979.

While he was at Heinz U.K., Mr. O'Reilly and a couple of partners started Fitzwilton, an investment firm. In 1973, he gained control of Independent Newspapers. In 1981, he started Atlantic Resources Ltd., a company exploring for oil off the Irish coast.

"I started with $32,000; I didn't have a silver spoon in my hand," he said. His holdings in all three ventures are now estimated at $10 million. He owns a large house in Ireland and a working stud farm on The Curragh, a plain in Kildare.

R. O'Reilly owes a lot of his corporate-cum-entrepreneurial career to R. Burt Gookin, tane.
Heinz when O'Reilly joined the company. Mr. Gookin endeavors for Mr. O'Reilly were the same as golf to other executives.

"Maybe I have sufficient experience in the world of the entrepreneur not to think that the grass is greener on the other side," Mr. O'Reilly said. "I've been on both sides of the septic

The skills needed to be successful in a top corporate job often are not considered the right skills for a successful entrepreneur, and vice versa. As chief executive of Heinz, Mr. O'Reilly has stuck to a rather conventional corporate strategy, confining any inclination for risk-taking to his Irish ventures

Fitzwilton, the investment company, has had ups and downs. The oil-exploration business, by Mr. O'Reilly's own account, is speculative. He struck oil in 1983, but the appraisal well came up dry and he is still waiting for another strike. His stud farm on The Curragh, southwest of Dublin, is another risky business; expensive if you are luckless, but with high gains if you come up with a

Japanese Get Trade Warning

Open Up or Else, U.S., Europe Say

TOKYO - The United States and the European Community urged Japan on Tuesday to open its markets to foreign products or face the prospect of trade barriers to black to prospect of trade barriers to block Japanese exports.

William Brock, the U.S. trade representative, told Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone that the Reapan administration was under intense pressure to counter a lopsided trade balance in Japan's favor, a foreign ministry spokesman said.

The EC's external affairs commissioner, Willy de Clercq, said he tried to explain to Mr. Nakasone that the community's $10.1-billion trade deficit with Japan last year was as serious a problem to the Europeans as the U.S. deficit. The United States had a $34-billion deficit with Japan last year, and the deficit was expected to inorease this year.

Mr. Brock was quoted by Japanese officials as telling Toshio Komoto, the minister in charge of external economic affairs, that protectionist sentiment was greater than he had ever known.

"Brock told Komoto there is a move in some quarters to impose import surcharges," one official

Mr. Brock said Japan must substantially open its markets to imports of forestry products, telecommunications equipment, electronics goods, drugs and medi-

Earlier in the day, speaking at a breakfast meeting before 300 people, Mr. Brock said Japan's fade relations with the world were "serious and rapidly worsening" and warned that its surplus "threatens to destabilize" the world trading

Mr. Brock also predicted that Japanese anto exports to the Unit-ed States would increase "immediately" should the two sides agree to lift the voluntary restraints on them scheduled to expire in March. He noted that Japan's total current-account surplus could reach $400 billion worldwide from 1983 to 1990, roughly equal to the 1974-1981 surplus attained by the Orga-nization of Petroleum Exporting

As Mr. Brock was meeting with Mr. Nakasone, the Finance Ministry reported Tuesday the country chalked up the first trade surplus for a January in 36 years.

Preliminary data released by the Finance Ministry showed that exports on the customs-clearance basis rose 8.2 percent over a year ago the nation's industrial production, to $11.035 billion while imports decould play a decisive role in procreased 4.2 percent to $10.57 biltion. Beginning at 3:30 A.M., hundreds of Shanghai residents gathered outside a red-brick building to sign up for the first stock offering here since 1949.
By 2 P.M., three hours before the offering closed, the full allot-ment of 5 million yuan ($1.79 million), had been sold to individual investors and to others buying on behalf of state-owned and collective institutions.

The stock offering by Yanzhong Industrial Corp. represented a cautious step forward into a new era of corporate fund-rais-ing mandated by reform-minded

Communist leaders in Beijing. But it also constituted a step back toward the old ways of do-ter before the Communists seized power 35 years ago. Some of the pensioners who lined up outside the Yanzhong office at 45 Ningjiang Road had been playing the market in 1950 when Communist troops threw a cordon around the old stock ex-change and made wholesale ar-rests of people inside. Some threw files out windows, and others set their offices on fire. Many were given nominal trials for "exploitation" and shipped away to spend years in distant labor

Under the leadership of Deng Xiaoping, efforts are being made to bind those wounds. Old "capitalists" are being rehabilitated, and some in Shanghai and Beijing are even getting their mansions back. Party leaders are consulting them on ways to propel the nation's economy, and they are being encouraged to lend any help they can in stirring back to life the embers of entrepreneur-climbed to new highs once again in thin trading on European foreignexchange markets, as central banks continued to abstain from any attempt to stop the dollar's rise.

Dealers said the dollar hit another 13-year high against the Deut-sche mark and a 10-year peak against the Swiss franc. It also against the Swiss franc. It also broke records against the British pound, the French franc, the Ital-ian lira, the Dutch guilder, the Spanish pesets and Scandinavian correncies. Volumes were low, since New York banks and many other U. S. banks were closed for Lincoln's Birthday, but in late-afternoon European trading Chicago banks played a big role in pushing up the dollar.

In Frankfurt, the dollar was fixed at 3.2782 DM, compared with 3.2573 at Monday's fixing. It was the dollar's fourth consecutive high against the mark, and some dealers in London said they believed a correction would have to come soon.
"I do feel a correction is due," said one dealer, "but my worry is that the market is not that long in dollars so the correction does not need to be that large, and I can't see what is going to spark it off. Who's going to be the first man to step forward and sell dollars?

"Fundamental analysis has gone out of the window," the dealer said, echoing a general feeling that the dollar is vastly overvalued on fundamental grounds but backed by

The pound was trading late Tuesday at $1.0898, down almost another cent from Monday's $1.096. The key three-month sterling interbank rate rose 1/8 point to close at 14 1/16 percent, eroding hopes that British bank-lending

The French franc was fixed in Paris at 10.023 to the dollar Tues-day, breaking the 10-franc level for the first time. The dollar was worth 9.9465 francs at the Paris fixing

The lira also continued retreating against the dollar's strength after hitting more than 2,000 against the dollar Monday for the first time; at the Milan fixing Tuesday the dollar was worth 2,015.80 lire, against 2,003.80 Monday. And the Dutch guilder fell to 3.7175 Tuesday at the Amsterdam fixing, compared with 3.69 against the dollar was 17 percent below the record crush of 1982, according to the state Department of Food and Ag-

The department's Crop and Livestock Reporting Service reported Monday that the weighted price of all grapes purchased for wine and other beverages was $166.34 a ton, a decline of 13 percent from the 1983 price of $190.97. The total crush of all varieties of wine grapes last year was 1.8 ml-lion tons. That was an increase of 2 percent over 1983, but down 13 percent from 1982.

Australia Cuts Deficit In Balance of Payments

CANBERRA, Australia — Australia's balance-of-payments defi-cit, as measured by net official monetary movements, narrowed to 146 million Australian dollars ($112 million) in January from 176 million dollars in December, the government statistics bureau & ported Tuesday. This compares, with a 163-million-dollar deficit in January 1984.

The bureau said the reduced deficit reflected an increase in net cap-ital inflow from 741 million dollars, in December to 990 million in Jan-uary. This inflow more than offset a rise in January's current accound deficit to 1,14 billion dollars. from 917 million in December.

Midway Airlines President Resigns, After Chairman

CHICAGO — The president of Midway Airlines has followed the chairman and resigned, completing the departure of the management team that developed the Midway Metrolink service and bought a bankrumt Florida airline.

Neal F. Meehan, who had been president since October 1982, told the airline Monday that he would resign effective Friday, when the airline's chairman, Arthur C. Bass, also is leaving. Mr. Bass announced his resignation Jan. 18.

In announcing Mr. Meehan's resignation, the airline offered no explanation other than to say he would "pursue other business interests." No replacement was announced.

Mr. Meehan, 43, was president and chief executive of New York Air before joining Midway. Mr. Bass is to be replaced as chairman by David Hinson, 51, who was among the founders of the airline in 1978. Mr. Hinson also had stepped in as acting chairman before Mr. Bass joined the airline in August 1982.

Under Mr. Bass, the airline initiated its Midway Metrolink service appealing to the business traveler, and had expanded into the leasure travel market by acquiring the assets of bankrupt Air Florida.

Airline stock analysts said the departure of Mr. Meehan and Mr. Bass may have been prompted by pressure from the airline's board because of poor results over the past two years. The company had a loss of $15 million in 1983 and a loss of $7 million in the first nine

DUNN'S CONUNDRUM By Stan Lee 338 pp. $15.95. Harper & Row, 10 East 53d Street, New York, N. Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Les Whitten

AT least since God in Genesis said he in-tended to blot out man and every creeping thing with a flood, the prospect of the apoca-lypse has thrilled and frightened us.

Lately, the threat of Soviet-American or terrorist madness or catastrophic scientific blunder has snawned so many fictional finales for mankind that a World's End Literary Guild seems inevitable. "Dunn's Conundrum" would be a worthy first selecton for such a club (one-year subscriptions only). It is plausibly backgrounded, suspenseful, swiftly plotted (in its last 100 pages), tastefully erotic, pleasantly zany — a good, solid "what if" novel about nuclear extinction

Whether these modest merits make it worthy of its selection by the Book-of-the-Month Club, however, or its 60,000-copy first printing, $75,000 ad campaign and $250,000 paper-back floor is debatable.

Many readers may leave it, as I did, with the feeling that they had undergone this particular end of the world before. For all its intense doomsaying, it has no sticking power: One feels the world may yet have a season or two before the end.

The Harry Dunn of the title is the head of The Library, an American intelligence agency that gets information from everywhere — the CIA, FBL NSA, even the KGB, the whole alphabet soup of snoopery, plus its own efficient electronic surveillances.

It can tune in on Washington's bars, file cabinets, parks, even on the bedrooms of the Librarians, as the officials of the agency are called. The Library forgives all transgressions (and it spots some doozies in the boudoirs of its own officials) except for disloyalty. Using this total information web, Dunn con-cludes that the United States can win a nuclear war with "only" 20 million American dead. We may even get out scot-free if the Soviets realize they cannot win and buckle.

Enter the hero, Walter Coolidge, one of the Librarians, a brilliant, somewhat daffy expert on garbage analysis, for each Librarian has one preeminent intelligence skill. Coolidge, called the Garbageman by his colleagues, is assigned by Dunn to find a traitor in the Library.

Coolidge discovers not only the mole but also that some political, shortsighted, stubborn and powerful men are probably going to destroy mankind.

It is no great revelation that men are corrupted morally in direct proportion to their use of bad means to justify good ends. In literature Macbeth becomes Macbeth, in life, the civilized leaders of 1914 became the dispensers of phosgene and mustard gas. But author Stan Lee does a good job of reminding us. For Coolidge, the path along Washington's Reflecting Pool is his road to Damascus. He forsakes the Library, and soon its entire operation is dedicated to finding and murdering him. Coolidge flees, in scenes with real snap, through Georgetown alleys, along Metrobus lines, on the Beltway.

And here, at last, "Dunn's Commonina" earns part of its keep. There is no putting it down until we find our exactly how the Garba. eman trashes the nuclear button-pushers.

Les Whitten, outhor of "A Killing Pace," wrote this review for The Washington Post.

FIFA's 'football family.'

Two days later came the stark

telexed reply from Sepp Blatter, the general secretary: "NO PLANS, IT IS NOT FIFA'S DUTY TO EN-TER THIS MATTER."

Dury? Of course there's no duty - except insofar as Alex English, the Deaver forward who organized

English, being black and able to recall days in South Carolina when his belly was rarely full, possibly sees humanity in a different light from Blatter, whose Swiss training in business administration and eco-nomics doubtless helps FIFA efficiently marshal its multimillion dollar annual turnover. If U.S. professional basketball, with no obvious African connection, and if Band Aid and other rock performers see it as their business to do something, why should FIFA be so unfeeling?

Between Ensebio and English there are high-boned facial resemblances: Between Eusebio's Afri-can brethren and FIFA there are 42 of the sport's 151 member nations and some half-million registered players, some of whom just might be among 140 million people in 20 countries suffering drought on that Third World votes put Blatter's boss, the Brazilian lawyer João Havelange, into power as FIFA president, the world's most influential single-sport office.

Lewis Weathering Grind of Stardom

By Frank Litsky New York Times Service

EAST RUTHERFORD, New Jersey — It's not always easy being Carl Lewis. When you win four gold medals in one Olympic Games, the money is good, the recognition is great and the honors flow. Celebrity has advantages; its grind also has a price.

Witness Lewis's recent schedule: Saturday, Feb. 2 — Wins the 60-yard dash at an indoor meet in Dallas in 6.10 seconds. Sanday, Feb. 3 — Flies home to Houston to train. Monday, Feb. 4 — Flies to Portland, Oregon, to receive the Prefontaine Award as America's outstanding track and field athlete of 1984, Tuesday, Feb. 5 — Flies home to Houston to train. Wednesday, Feb. 6 - Flies to New York to receive the Jesse Owens Interna-tional Amateur Athlete Award.

Thursday, Feb. 7 - Flies to Los Angeles, arriving at 5 A.M. Friday, Feb. 8 — Wins the long jump at 27 feet 1% inches (8.27 meters) at The Los Angeles Times meet. Saturday, Feb. 9 — Flies to New York, arriving at 5:45 P.M. Wins the 55-meter dash in 6.15 seconds at the U.S. Olympic Invitational in East Rutherford. Sunday, Feb. 10 — Sleeps late. Monday, Feb. 11 — Flies to Buffalo to receive the Dunlop enough to enjoy it all.

There was plenty to enjoy Saturday night at Byrne Meadowlands Arena. Within 22 minutes, he won his race, received the Vitalis Award for Sports Excellence and sang the national authern over the publicaddress system.

"I haven't won a sprint in New Jersey before," said the native of Willingboro, New Jersey, "so that was good. The award is important because a lot is involved. And I feel good about the national anthem because it is something I like to do. It's the first time I've done that." Lewis has taken acting and sing-ing lessons, and he made a record last year. He said he learned 10 seconds before he sang the national anthem that there would be no music to accompany him. His voice was pleasant and every note seemed on key.

There are many stories of singers who have forgotten the words to the national anthem. He said he was a little pervous before singing, but more nervous before his race.

"I thought I ran a technically good race," said Lewis. "I was really pleased with the indoor season. It's the first time I've gone undefeated indoors." The abbreviated season consisted of four meets sprints here and in Dallas and long jumps at the Wanamaker Millrose Games and in Los Angeles. Now Lewis faces six weeks of training before he starts his outdoor season with April meets in Phoenix; El Paso and Walnut, California.

His outdoor goals are to improve career bests in his three individual events — the 100- and 200-meter dashes and the long jump. He is history's second-longest in the long. mp, second-fastest at 200 meters and fourth-fastest at 100. For years, he has threatened Bob Beamon's hallowed long jump re-cord of 29 feet 21/2 inches. He has iumped 28-104. "It doesn't bother me that I don't have the world record," he said. "I think that if the record is to come, it will come. I just want to set a personal record this year, and I know that this year won't be as hectic as last year."

Things are looking up for Lewis. Singing the national anthem before 14,833 spectators was a break-through of sorts. "I didn't sing in high school," he said. "I was too shy. I was scared. Not anymore,"

Olympic Officials Displeased At USOC's Vetoing Rebates

LOS ANGELES — Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee President Peter Ueberroth and International Olympic Committee President Juan Antonio Samaranch expressed displeasure Monday at the U.S. Olympic Committee's veto of their proposal to use $7 million in surplus Olympic funds to reimburse foreign Olympic committees for their housing costs at the 1984 Games. Before an LAOOC executive board meeting Monday on the subhad effectively killed the proposed cash reimbursements. Ueberroth, now baseball commissioner but still retaining his title as president of the LAOOC, said thing to do.... I still feel this is right very strongly. But it's up to the LAOOC and USOC boards."

Samaranch, in Lausanne, Switzerland, dismissed as unsatisfactory the USOC's proposed alterna-tive of a "friendship" program of exchanges and assistance for U.S. and foreign athletes.

The IOC president also took exception to suggestions at Sunday's USOC debate that the reimbursements would have mainly constituted a giveaway to rich Olympic ject, chairman Paul Ziffren said committees. One speaker had not-that the unanimous USOC veto ed that $558,000 of the $7 million would have gone to West Germany and $458,000 to Canada.

Puttin' Off the Ritz

By Russell Baker

President Reagan's State of the off Young Frankenstein so that Union speech took place, so no- the president's charm, geniality, body would have known had I de- and good fellowship may make me cided to pass up the president and feel good." stick with "Young Frankenstein"

I knew this was the smart thing to do. In fact, throughout dinner I had planned to stick with "Young Frankenstein," though I had seen it monster sing "Puttin' On the Ritz," before. The scene near the end in which Peter Boyle, as Young Frankenstein's monster, appears in formal dress to sing "Puttin" On the Ritz" would be far more interesting, I knew, than the spectacle of the president's Cabinet shambling into the House of Representatives.

As for watching the entrances of the Supreme Court justices and the how a president talking of making diplomatic corps, give me a mon-ster doing the old soft-shoe any day and you can have all the writs of certiorari and diplomatic immunity in Washington.

And so while eating my lonely meal (two boiled potatoes, a halfcan of creamed corn, the right half of the roasted chicken whose left half I had eaten the previous night, three tinned pear halves, a glass of suspiciously cheap Beaujolais and two cups of coffee). I tickled my fancy with the thought that soon when most of the United States would be snoring at turgid oratory from dimmest Washington, I should be enjoying the sublime nonsense of Frankenstein's monster dancing in white tie and tails.

Why, then, promptly at 9 P. M., did I switch my dial to the drab scene in the House of Representatives? The explanation is patriotism. There is some nationalistic urge within us that will not let us sit idly by savoring life's joys when our country calls upon us to participate even in its most sterile exercises. And can any be more sterile than the State of the Union Message? Well, the congressional leadership joining the White House staff for a prayer breakfast, perhaps.

Having switched from "Young Frankenstein." I tried to rationalize the decision, to assure myself it had been based on something more than coarse patriotic emotion. Since his huge victory in November, I had been reading a great deal charm, geniality, and good fellow-New YORK —I was alone at ship making Americans feel good. So I told myself, "I have switched Yet President Reagan has never made me feel good. I would worry about myself if any president could make me feel good. While it is norfeeling good about presidents can be done only by someone whose life is utterly empty. Still, there I was, missing "Young Frankenstein" and struggling to stay awake while the president talked of making revolution. And as I passed in and out of stupor, I found myself wondering revolution could produce no re-sponse but supplaction.

Well, of course the president was playing a game with words. Some-body, a speechwriter no doubt, had persuaded him that because of the good old American Revolution, Americans ought to pay lip service to revolution, and the president was doing so. He is most charming and genial when he is talking nonsense like this, for then it is most clear that he is a man of pictures, not ideas, and that his is a government in which a single idea would be worth a million pictures.

But it is not available, that single idea, so they fit him out with words to emit while he creates the pictures so suavely. Words like "revolu-tion." He talks of "a second American Revolution of hope and opportunity," and so on. Some Robespierre! Imagine him working the guillotine? He is about as revolutionary as the Duke of Wellington. His dream is to bury the Pentagon under money and shut down the railroads. That is a program of sorts, but calling it a "revolution" is turning language upside down. When a president who doesn't make you feel bad insults your intelligence, the natural thing, I suppose, is simply to fall asleep. When I awoke, "Young Frankenstein," alas, was off, and something boiled potatoes, pear halves, Beaujolais, or the second American Revolution — was disagreeing with me.

Alan Parker

The Most Distinguishing Feature of Any of His Films Is His Consistently Excellent Work With Actors

By Vincent Canby

New York Times Service

New YORK — In all the Inish of movie openings at the year's end, and with all of the publicity about the staggering popularity of "Beverly Hills Cop" and the possible financial disasters of "Cotton Club" and "Dune," some interesting films have been in danger of being overlooked. One is "Birdy." the screen adaptation of William the fine, eccentric 1979 novel by William Wharton, the pseudonym of an American painter living in

Directed by Alan Parker from a screenplay by Sandy Kroopf and Jack Behr, the film is so good and intelligent and moving that it may be time for an upward reevaluation of all the work by this idiosyncratic, not conventionally likable English film director.

Like "Birdy," the book as well as the film, Parker is not easily pigeonholed, which tends to put off critics who feel most comfortable attaching labels to directors and making them stick. So far, each of Parker's movies has been so different from the one preceding it that any such labeling has been difficult indeed.

After a successful career in television commercials in England, Parker made his theatrical film debut nine years ago with the improbably funny and stylish Bugsy Malone, an ebullient satire of 1920s gangster movies played by a cast of precocious children, including the 14-yearold Jodie Foster.

By some sleight-of-hand, with his own mysterious talent and with lots of help from his associates, including Paul Williams, who wrote the movie's excellent score, Parker pulled it off. "Bugsy Malone" was an unexpected lark, played not exactly straight but with the understated, mock gravity that made the stage version of Sandy Wilson's "The Boy Friend" so much fun.

Having established himself as a satirist - Parker wrote the Moon" it was apparent that satisfies — Father whose the screenplay for "Bugsy" as well as directing it — he pulled a fast one more going for him than the kind on all of us by making "Midnight of brisk modishness we often mison all of us by making "Midnight Express" (1978), the brutally hair-raising story of a young sion hucksterism at its best. American drug smuggler in a "Shoot the Moon," with a good Turkish prison. The movie, a script by Bo Goldman, is a small len and an extremely young ac-popular success, was expertly act-domestic drama about the bitter tress named Dana Hill, as the that requires a delicate release."]

ed by Brad Davis, Bo Hopkins, Randy Quaid and John Hurt, but one couldn't help feeling that there was something profoundly. gratuitously nasty about its sen-sationalism. The very slickness of the melodrama, which had the effect of reinforcing the brutality, obscured the director's technical virtuosity. The following year, Parker moved in another direction entirely with "Fame," a "Chorus Line" like musical about students at New York's High School for the Performing Arts and a movie that appeared to have no relation to either of his earlier films except in its stylishness, which is not necessarily a nice word. After "Fame" there were, in quick succession, "Shoot the Moon" and "Pink Floyd: the Wall," both released in 1982. I never did see "The Wall," a rock musical, but with "Shoot the trust for its associations to televiend of a marriage, in which the husband and wife alternately refuse to acknowledge the painful facts of their lives.

The moods of Parker films may vary wildly, but there's seldom any doubt that a Parker film is the vision of the person in control of the production, that is, the director. This statement might amuse the director who, in an interview a few years ago, spoke somewhat acidly of the auteur theory and of critics who automatically credit the director with having done everything in a mov-ie, good and bad, as if assuming that the production of any film is not the complicated collaborative process it actually is. Up to a point, he is right to be skeptical.

The most distinguishing feature of any Parker film is his consistently excellent work with actors, which involves initial casting choices as well as obtaining performances from those actors when they're on the set. "Shoot the Moon" remains memorable not only for the performances of Diane Keaton and Albert Finney in the central roles, but also for those of Peter Weller, Karen Alchild most damaged by the separation of her parents. "Birdy" is similarly distinguished by the leading performances of Matthew Modine, as the catatonic Vietnam veteran who wants to escape an irrational world by becoming a bird, an oddball who is as tough and determined as he is sweet-natured, and Nicolas Cage, as Birdy's bat-tle-scarred childhood friend, Al. It's Al who attempts to bring Birdy back to reality, to save himself as well as Birdy. As fine as both Modine and Cage are, however, their work does not exist in a vacuum. It's supported by a stunning cast of actors including John Harkins as Birdy's army psychiatrist. Sandy Baron as Al's father, George Buck as Birdy's father, Karen Young as Birdy's nurse in the psychiatric hospital, and Dolores Sage, a non-professional as Birdy's mother.

What, exactly, is "Birdy" about? I'm still not sure and I've now seen it twice, appreciating it even more the second time than the first. It is — I think — about growing up. It describes the unspeakable, unrecognized terrors coming of age, of arriving at that point in awareness when one accepts irrationality as the universal, governing system.

Parker and the screenwriters have done a remarkable job in fitting the source material to the screen, making cinematic what, in the original, is a series of interior monologues alternating between Birdy and Al. The film, which opens and closes in Birdy's hospital, is seen through interlocking flashbacks.

When Birdy, at last, achieves his release and "flies," the sequence has the breathtaking quality of a dream one doesn't want to ["Birdy" is being released across the United States this month, the Associated Press reported. It opened in New York and briefly in Toronto and Los Angeles during the holidays to qualify for the Academy Awards, but received no nominations.

["The vanity of the Academy Awards is irresistible, and I was part of it." remarked Parker, 41.
"Birdy' shouldn't have come out with all the Christmas attrac-ton, one of England's richest and more eccentric lords, is selling Andrea Mantegna's "Adoration of the Magi" at a Christie's auction in London April 19. The painting dating from about 1500 and one of the few Mantegnas remaining in private hands, almost certainly will bring £5 million ($5.5 million), said Christie's director Patrick Landsay. The marquess, 38, owns two stately homes — Castle Ashby and Compton Wynyates. Sometimes called the mystic marquess" for his penchant for spiritualism and "mystical places around the world," he married for the fourth time a month ago. He is selling the Mantegna "purely for the money" needed to keep up his residences, a Christie's spokesman said.

A Mantegna to Be Sold

The Harlem Globetrotters drib-bled into the Smithsonian Institution Monday to make a contribution to the National Museum of American History. The basketball tricksters donated uniforms, warmup suits, books, posters and pictures to the museum's "Constella-tion of Black Stars" exhibit, which also includes Roberto Clemente's batting helmet, Jim Brown's football jersey and George Foreman's boxing gloves. The Globetrotters also announced they would go coed next year. Applications already have poured in from more than 100 women who want to join the team. Five or six finalists will be selected before next summer's training

The U.S. National Board of Review of Motion Pictures gave out its sixth annual D. W. Griffith Awards, but the only honoree to make the star-studded ceremonies was actor Victor Banerjee, and the absentees included ailing director John Huston. Banerjee, named best actor of 1984, hailed the occasion at the Players Club in New York Monday night as "a great day" for himself and his fellow Indians. He was honored for his performance in "A Passage to India," which was D. W. Griffith Career Achieve-sentation was made at the British.

Crown Prince Akihito of Japan and his wife, Princess Michiko, will visit Spain beginning Feb. 26, then go to Ireland, government officials said Tuesday. The trip would recip rocate for the state visits paid to Japan by Spain's King Juan Carlos and his wife in 1980 and by Irish President Patrick Hillery and his wife in 1983, the officials said Before their visit to Spain, Akihito and Michiko will make a three-day unofficial visit to Portugal for a meeting with President Antinio Ramalho Eanes. After a weeklong trip to Ireland, they will make an overnight stop in Britain for a reunion with their son, Prince Hiro, a student at Oxford.

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has refused to rescind its award of a Distinguished Service Medal to Arthur Rudolph, who gave up American citizenship and returned to West Germany last year rather than face Justice Department charges that he mistreated slave laborers in Germany during World War II. Rudolph has denied from his home in Hamburg that he was involved in any brutality. A NASA spokesman said that the medal had been given because of Rudolph's service in the United States and "has nothing in common with the allegation" against him." It was awarded for his part in developing the Same rocket that sent U.S. astronauts to
